1. Deputy Director of Central Intelligence				Your list looks pretty good. I would add the following points: --On the Soviet Union your interest centers on high technology, yet we have seen the Soviets in some cases double the size of their industrial plants; suggest they will need plain old production machinery, much of which will have to be acquired from the West. So under high-technology I would also add Western machinery not available in the USSR which can aid in their military production. --Under Germany and Other Allies you should specify the future impact of West European unity on NATO. --The one thing I worry about on terrorism: while not on the rise it has taken the focus of anti-American and therefore I believe we will see in the future a great many more acts perpetrated against U.S. installations and U.S. companies as well as U.S. persons.
